To Whom It May Concern,

I had the pleasure of hearing Amy deliver her speech, “Lipstick on a Pig,” at an event, and I can confidently say she left a lasting impression. From the moment she began speaking, she captured the audience’s attention and created a connection that felt both genuine and effortless.

Amy’s speech held my attention from start to finish, which says a lot because I tend to get bored easily when it comes to public speaking. She has a way of making herself and her stories instantly relatable. In fact, if anyone in the audience said they couldn’t relate to something she shared, I would have a hard time believing them. Her speech centers on using an optimistic perspective to make the best of one’s personal reality, and it was a message delivered in a way I had honestly never heard before. Amy is not only a brilliant woman, but also incredibly original.

Her message was uplifting while still being honest and raw in the best way. She has a real gift for turning life’s challenges into moments of humor, reminding people that optimism does not mean ignoring hard things — it means choosing to carry them with lightness, perspective, and grace. That is exactly what her message is about, and it truly hit home for me. As someone who has dealt with a fair amount of self-doubt, I can genuinely say her words resonated on a personal level. I believe Amy has the ability to share her story with a wide range of people in many different circumstances, and still make each person feel seen, understood, and connected to her message. She uses her personal experiences to illustrate her points and tell her story, which makes her style of storytelling both engaging and conversational.

Amy is a gifted speaker, and I would not hesitate to recommend her to others. I believe her message has the ability to resonate with a wide range of audiences and leave people feeling inspired, understood, and encouraged.

Sincerely,

Claire Tulak
